A Journey Through the Mediterranean

Long before the word "wine" ever appeared on a menu, it was being poured along the sun-drenched coasts of the Mediterranean. From the limestone hills of Greece to the volcanic soils of Sicily and the windswept shores of Spain, this region gave birth to viticulture itself, a cradle of vines that has been cultivated for over 6,000 years.

The Phoenicians were the first to trade wine across the sea, carrying amphorae filled with sweet reds and golden whites from port to port. The Greeks called wine "the gift of Dionysus," and planted vines wherever they settled, even training their sailors to carry cuttings as they colonized new lands. Later, The Romans perfected winemaking on a grand scale, introducing barrel aging, vineyard mapping, and the concept of terroir, long before The French coined the word.

Today, we honor that heritage by pouring wines that all share one thing in common: a view of the same sea. Whether it's a crisp Assyrtiko from Santorini, a sun-baked Tempranillo from Spain, or a mineral-rich Etna Bianco from the Italian coast, every bottle tells the story of salt air, ancient soil, and generations of craft.

These are wines made for food, for conversation, and for connection, just as they were thousands of years ago.

Raise a glass to the sea that started it all!
